

Court rules against Napster

Web site guilty of violating copyright laws

SUE DIGIULIO
EDITOR IN CHIEF

More than 50 million Napster users were rankled by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit's decision to ban the popular Web site, finding their actions illegal and in violation of copyright laws. Nearly two years of battling with the courts concluded on Feb. 12 as Napster founder Shawn Fanning watched his Internet creation all but crumble as a result of the hearing held in San Francisco.

The appeals court's written decision stated, "Conversely, it is obvious that once a user lists a copy of music he already owns from another location, the song becomes available to millions of other individuals, not just the original CD owner."

Music giants like Metallica and Dr. Dre were the fuel behind the Napster legal fire after suing them for copyright infringement in 2000. Other bands such as Rage Against the Machine were angered by the ruling, issuing a public apology to their fans and posting alternative web sites at which various Rage MP3s and music videos could be found.

"While we were not aware of this plan to deprive our fans of our music, once we were made aware of the situation, we started taking steps to correct it," Rage Against the Machine guitarist Tom Morello said. "We want to apologize to our fans, and it is important to us to make it right."

Perhaps the most disgruntled of all are the Napster users who were no longer able to download songs as of Feb. 17. SSU students who used Napster were resolute about their opinions on the subject.

"As a college student, it's nice to get free music," said junior Jon D'Alessio. "I understand that it conflicts with copyright laws, but the music industry makes enough money that it shouldn't matter."

Sophomore Amy Penny saw the court's ruling in a different light. "People don't have to buy CDs now because of Web sites like Napster, and I can see how that could be perceived as a form of stealing," said Penny.

Napster is currently turning its efforts towards creating a membership service to its Web site. For a monthly fee, members can exchange music files, though Napster's chief executive Hank Barry said that the company will run into some problems allowing users to trade only the songs authorized by record labels and musicians.

"Even without Napster, students will find a way to get free music," said sophomore Andy Nelson.

"Napster works because people who love music share and participate," said Fanning in a statement following the court's ruling. "Today we have more than 50 million members, and we'll all find a way to keep this community growing. If we work together and let members of Congress know how important Napster is to us, we'll succeed."

SSU students relied on Napster for hearing new bands and getting album previews.

Femineyes

Debuts as RSO, Publishes 'zine

JOSH DAVIDSON
NEWS EDITOR

After finally being approved club status by the Salisbury State University SGA, Femineyes is publishing its first 'zine this month. After a long attempt to gain acceptance by the SGA, Femineyes became an official SSU club at the end of last semester.

The first Femineyes 'zine will contain an article on bisexuality and two interviews, one with singer/feminist Peggy Seager, and one with a member of the local band, Red Letter Day. According to Femineyes founder Eileen Miller, the 'zine will also feature SSU student artwork and poetry.

"Not everything has a feminist slant, but we're slowly trying to incorporate feminism into people's everyday lives and make the campus community more aware of what feminism is and how important it is," said Miller.

Miller hopes that the campus community will closely examine the 'zine and find its information to be both enlightening and factual. Teachers should discuss issues in the Femineyes 'zine with students in the classroom and make students more knowledgeable about certain issues and perhaps change people's views on feminism, said Miller.

There will only be one Femineyes 'zine released per semester, with each current issue representing last semester's publication. The publication of the next issue of the Femineyes 'zine is expected in May.

Search for Provost continues

BETTY VOLTAIRE
STAFF WRITER

The quest for SSU's new Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs is underway as the search committee gear up for more interviews this week to choose the top academic post.

"We've been conducting this national search since the fall," said Dr. Elizabeth Curtin of the English Department. Curtin is co-chair of the Provost search committee along with Dr. Carol Williamson, Vice President of Student Affairs. The committee is made up of students, staff and faculty from various departments. While President Janet Dudley-Esbach is not an official member of the committee, she does play a part in the search, interviewing with candidates during their time on campus.

"We've gone from over 90 candidates to six," Dr. Curtin said. "We wish to have a list of finalists to present to the University of Alaska, Anchorage.

The other three candidates hail from various universities across the nation: Thomas Wilson Jones, Dean of the Henson School of Science and Technology at Salisbury State University; David H. Buchanan, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at West Chester University; and Paul T. Schollaert, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Illinois State University.

More information on the candidates, including biographies, can be obtained via web at www.ssu.edu/academics/provost/candidates. Remaining provost candidate open meeting times and dates are:

president by March 3."

The ideal candidate, according to the advertisement posted last fall, would be "a proven, enthusiastic, and energetic leader... and a team player that is skillful in building consensus, fostering a collegial environment, and promoting a shared vision for the University."

The importance of the involvement of the entire campus community in conducting the search has been stressed by advertisements on open sessions, e-mails and by committee members.

"There are two open meetings for each candidate," one committee member said. "One of the open meetings is with faculty and the second is with the whole campus community. It is important that members of the campus community attend these meetings and ask questions that are relevant to their constituent and the University at large."

"We hope students, staff and faculty will all participate in (the) big discussion on all candidates on March 2 from 3:30 p.m.-5 p.m.," Dr. Curtin said. dation for students going to graduate school for creative writing," said Waters.

The Writers on the Shore series has been a major success at SSU for many years and it has brought many revered and esteemed faces to the campus for readings with both students and faculty, some who are even Pulitzer Prize winners and National Book Award winners.

"This program has been going on for more than 20 years, and we've always had a consistent audience," said Waters, who does a large part in organizing and preparing for this program. "We often draw attention not only from the campus community but from the surrounding community as well. Sometimes, depending on the writer, we've had more than 200 people show up for a certain reading."

Among the many famed writers who have participated in the Writers on the Shore program in the past two decades are Gary Snyder, Toni Morrison, Raymond Carver, Mary Oliver, Tillie Olsen, Richard Ford, Grace Paley, Robert Bly, Mark Strand, Marilyn Nelson, Louis Simpson, Allison Joseph, W.D. Snodgrass, Nina Cassian, and Jean Valentine. All readings are free to the public and seating is established through a first-come, first-serve basis.

Napster: No longer taking From the rich and giving to the poor

Remember listening to the radio, hoping the next song will be the one you've been waiting for, finger perched on the record button of your tape player so that you may capture your new favorite song forever on a high-quality TDK? Well, music fans may have to revert back to getting their favorite tunes ye olde-fashioned way, or at least start buying CDs again thanks to the recent ban of Internet giant Napster.

Despite Dr. Dre's No. 1 hit LP Chronic 2001 and Metallica's highly successful S&M tour last year, these two greedy music bigwigs had to ruin it for all of us by suing tech entrepreneur Shawn Fanning for his genius non-profit Web site that they claimed robbed them of profits. I'm sure as a result, it was a real struggle for the Metallica band members to get some food on the table at the end of the day.

What I would like someone to explain to me is how downloading MP3s from Napster to save on your own personal hard drive is any different than taping a song off the radio or recording a movie on television. Napster is nothing more than an advanced method of executing an age-old practice that consumers have practiced for years—getting free stuff.

To find the 50+ million Napster members guilty of violating copyright laws is almost laughable. The true crime committed here has been by the record industry itself. Charging listeners an average of $18 for a paper-thin disc that costs less than a penny to manufacture is abomination of capitalism.

Some may argue that the music industry was justified in their actions and that Napster does, in some way, promote theft of their music. My argument is that they are simply greedy. The American public spends entirely too much money on entertainment, a large portion of which is music only. If you ask me, they're stealing from us.

But nonetheless, we thieves shall prevail. CD burners, bootleg tapes and CDs, black-market LPs, and not to mention the other hundreds of Web sites that offer downloadable MP3s shall get us through these tough times. And as we tearfully bid farewell to the half-man, half-cat icon that we've clicked on time and time again for hours of downloading enjoyment, take comfort in the knowledge that musicians everywhere shall no longer be inconvenienced with the trouble of having their music heard.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor,

On Thursday, Feb. 8, newly minted SSU President Janet Dudley-Eshbach announced sweeping new measures to increase "diversity" at our school. We, the undersigned, are all current students at Salisbury State and take issue with her proposal. We'd like to explain why.

Dr. Dudley-Eshbach said that Salisbury State is "diversity-challenged" and that we are the "least racially diverse of the traditionally white institutions" in Maryland. Sounds okay—but it's misleading.

"Diversity-challenged" is a euphemism. It's a feel-good phrase that seeks to create a problem when there is none and to assuage liberal guilt. What it means in reality is this: That the powers that be do not think there are enough students of one race or another at SSU. And they want to fiddle with the rules to bring more desired groups on campus at the expense of everyone else.

The late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. said he dreamed of a day when his children would "live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character." That is our dream, too.

Diversity is a code word. It divides the student body into involuntary groups based on skin color. Merit, ability, and scholastic achievement all have no meaning at a "diverse" institution. Diversity does not treat students as individuals but instead as "whites," "blacks," "Hispanics," et cetera. Instead of treating everyone equally, diversity creates preferred groups, where some students are treated differently than others because of skin color. That is bigotry. That is racism. That is discrimination. And that is wrong.

Sincerely,
Michael Anderson, senior

NAACP chapter makes strides

JENNIFER ANDERSON
FEATURES EDITOR

Perhaps the acronym NAACP is misleading. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People strives to do just that, improve the prestige of minority races in the United States. However, especially in the case of SSU's chapter, the NAACP encompasses much more than a history of civil rights movements.

The NAACP is the oldest civil rights organization in the United States. Ninety-one years ago, the group held its first meeting on Abraham Lincoln's birthday, Feb. 12, in New York City. There were African-Americans as well as whites present at the meeting, united by a commitment to see social justice improve in the United States. Today, people of all races and backgrounds are encouraged to join.

According to its mission statement, the NAACP's principle objective "is to ensure the political, educational, social, and economic equality of minority group citizens in the U.S. and eliminate racial prejudice." Rather than relying on radical measures to achieve these goals, the NAACP works through the democratic process, seeking the enforcement and creation of federal, state and local legislature. The group also makes efforts to secure the basic civil rights of all people by educating the public about the adverse effects of racial discrimination. With a total membership of more than 500,000, spread across all 50 states, Japan and Germany, this vision becomes more and more a reality each day.

Important as it is to curb racial discrimination, the NAACP chapter at SSU has other goals on its agenda as well. Under the leadership of a new chapter president, sophomore Darren Jackson, the group has planned activities and projects for this year that are keeping with the NAACP's purpose. Not only have they scheduled several community service projects, but the group will also hold informative, open-discussion meetings on pertinent issues every other Thursday. The group has spearheaded a youth outreach program, and plans to host several speakers this semester.

"We are people-oriented," Jackson said of his administration. "We want to start with... campus [outreach] and work our way out." One of the primary goals Jackson has for the group this year is to actually set objectives into action, and do less "talking" about them.

Perhaps this is one of the reasons the NAACP is so fond of President Janet Dudley-Eshbach's approach to issues facing SSU.

Decoding the 'rush' process A look into an important part of the Greek system

NICOLE LENIHAN
SPECIAL TO THE FLYER

Ever wondered what all those Greek symbols and terms you see on brothers' and sisters' sweatshirts mean? In the last few weeks of Spring Recruitment, many students may be curious as to what the whole process is all about. Here's an inside look at what many SSU women have experienced as they enter into a sorority.

Along with many academic fraternities, SSU boasts four active male fraternities: Alpha Sigma Phi, Pi Lambda Phi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, and Tau Kappa Epsilon, and four sororities: Alpha Sigma Tau, Delta Gamma, Phi Mu, and Zeta Tau Alpha. SSU's Greek system is diverse and full of opportunity. Three bodies, the Greek Council, Interfraternity Council

(IFC) and the Panhellenic Association, unify the Greek system. These organizations serve as a bridge between individual organizations as well as between the Greek and non-Greek communities.

While many of the organizations on campus are undergoing, or have just completed, their informal Spring Recruitment, SSU's Formal Recruitment (what used to be called "Rush") takes place every fall. All four women's organizations are represented through the National Panhellenic Council and the Panhellenic Association during a joint recruitment process where any interested woman is invited to attend an informational meeting to register for Recruitment.

During this process, the women are split into groups, each with two Rho Chi, or Recruitment Counselors. These counselors are members of the four organizations who have volunteered to disassociate from the group and act as impartial advisors to the potential new members.

With their Rho Chi, the women are brought to a series of informational "parties" where they are introduced to the members of the sororities and get to learn what each organization has to offer. Each organization participates in both local and national philanthropic causes. These causes range from breast cancer awareness (ZTA), aid to the blind and visually impaired (DG), and the Children's Miracle Network (Phi Mu), to the Pine Mountain Settlement, a school which provides education and vocational training to the surrounding Appalachian Mountain community (AST). After the series of informational "parties" the women are invited back to two preference parties of their choice. This is the last night of recruitment, and the last night for the organizations to make an impression on the potential new members.

On Bid Day, the women are presented with their "bid", or invitation to join the organization; it is the hope of every organization that every bid extended is a bid accepted. Once a bid is accepted, the new member enters an educational period many refer to as "pledging." During this time, the new members learn the history and backgrounds of both their national organization and their local chapter. At the end of this period, the women are initiated and welcomed as a sister in their organization.

The Four Horsemen of Hip-Hop Separating the Worthy from the Whack

ROB GOSZKOWSKI
STAFF WRITER

"I want a DJ that wrecks, I want production that breaks necks from bobbin' the head, I want an MC to flex with intellect..."
-Foreign Legion

The state of hip-hop music today is not easily discernible; the mainstream has become for the most part, a homogenized group of unenlightened MCs with overproduced, simplistic but catchy beats. These people seem incapable of rapping about anything other than the usual diamonds, bankrolls, and garden tools. However, the mainstream is a poor reflection of the diversity, creativity, and thought that embodies hip-hop culture. These aspects of hip-hop have accounted for its sustainability and growth throughout the past several decades. Its influence on our culture is undeniable (e.g. the Mountain Dew commercials featuring Busta Rhymes, or the even worse McDonald's commercials featuring some very bad freestyle rapping, to the explosion of "rap/rock" acts in heavy rotation on MTV and rock radio stations). All of this exposure has led to an influx of new music and artists entering the hip-hop scene, making it harder to separate the worthy from the whack. However, the lack of quality found in the mainstream has resulted in a flourishing underground where many artists are driven to work harder at their craft so that hip-hop may earn the respect it deserves. This does not rule out the possibility of a successful and exceptional hip-hop group or album. For example, Outkast's Stankonia is critically acclaimed and also a hit record.

This is an unbiased review of various mainstream and underground hip-hop releases utilizing a 10 point rating system and the opinions of four hip-hop heads. Input from Jay Crawford, host of "Da Foundation" on WSUR and a member of Written Prisms; Brian Cometa, student here at SSU and conspirator of the 410 Dragons, and Eric Toney, DJ and student at Washington & Lee in Virginia, is included in this review. We are all fans of hip-hop and seek some similar qualities in it. One aspect of the music that all of us are looking for is originality found in an MC's lyrics, as well as delivery. Original beats should blend well with the content of the song and enhance it. All agree that a meaningful message should be presented within the lyrics. This doesn't necessarily have to be true 100 percent of the time, but an artist who builds his career on superficial or unoriginal topics will not hold the public's attention for very long. Toney points out that artists who rely heavily on clever or mildly amusing sound bites in their rhymes do not really elevate very far beyond that in their subject matter. Eminem is an example of this, he may have a way with words and is witty on occasion, but he rarely has anything meaningful or enlightening to offer in his rhymes. Crawford agrees with this point but takes issue with the lack of optimism in Eminem's music.

"A quality album would present a positive vibe, whether it encompasses conscious lyrics or a creative concept," all of which are criteria that Eminem has not met in the past. If the energy of a particular album is generally negative, a good review from Crawford is not likely.

"Quality doesn't involve excessive profanity, glamorized violence, or disrespecting females."

I hold a similar opinion, but also feel that a positive tone can be accomplished in a manner that is combative and forceful.

There are MCs out there that have a serious issue with poor representations of real hip-hop music. In this case, vicious metaphors or battle imagery used by these MCs should not be misinterpreted or taken completely literally. A glaring example of an album like this is GZA/Genius's first record Liquid Swords.

Beats are an equally important part of an album. An MC can have the best flow in the industry, but it will not make it far if the production isn't on point. This is the case with Canibus. Few would argue that he is not a talented MC, but his last two albums fared much worse than expected - due mostly to bad beats. The four of us look for both similar and different traits in the beats used on an album. Crawford looks for "a nice blend of smooth, jazzy beats and driving rhythms that allow the MC to fully express him or herself and display his or her lyrical talent." Cometa prefers a harder sound but has the most respect for artists whose albums feature a wide range of beats; this also requires a versatile MC or group of MCs that have the skill to adjust their flow to match the beat. Personally I agree with Cometa, a well-rounded album cannot rely on formulaic beats that either mimic the latest sound or resort to sampling old songs without changing anything but the lyrics like Puffy does. Toney just has to be able to bob his head to it; if he can't then there is something severely lacking in the beat.

Each individual can give the album reviewed a maximum of 2.5 points. The points given by each reviewer will be tallied for the final verdict for a possible high score of 10. Mainstream, underground, and local artists will hopefully be reviewed with the same standards, but personal biases will inevitably enter into people's score. For example, some of us may judge a mainstream artist more harshly than an underground artist because we feel that this artist must be substantially superior to the next because he/she has achieved great recognition and commercial success.

The first review will appear next week when we critique The Pharcyde's latest album "Plain Rap", an appropriate choice since they are one of the groups being considered for the Field Day concert this year.

Tiffany Guest

KRISTEN MARTIN
FEATURES EDITOR

Freshman Tiffany Guest has been constantly involved in the campus community since she arrived here last semester. In fact, it is not surprising that many faculty, peers, and even our university president are familiar with the wholeheartedness and spunk that Guest puts into her activities and dreams.

During the Fall term, Guest quickly engaged herself in volunteer work through the Fruitland Community Center. Twice a week she participated in a program called 'Circle,' in which she mentored for children ranging in age from 7 to 15 years.

"Circle helps young children identify their strengths, weaknesses, and talents. We help the children to identify possible career interests and tutor them as well," Guest explains.

Besides volunteer work, being a full time student, and even holding a job in the admissions house, Guest's main interests these days are the recruitment of minorities and making SSU's environment more positive and comfortable for all ethnicities. Asked to come aboard the campus' Diversity Task Force, Guest attended the press conference, which was held on Feb. 8, and sat on the panel board alongside President Dr. Janet Dudley-Eshbach. Guest spoke on the "diversity climate," and why the campus is not attracting an acceptable number of minority students.

SSU is considered to be the least diverse campus in all of the University of Maryland schools. Currently there are only nine percent African Americans on campus, and Guest explained that even this number is not entirely accurate because this counts students that transfer from UMES to attend classes as well.

Guest is pleased however with the effort Dudley-Eshbach has put toward this problem. "She's concerned with African American comfort level, and how SSU can be improved," says Guest. Hopefully with the grant for the Partnership for Success program and possibly a future minority house (if we keep our fingers crossed), the school will move towards eradicating the stigma of a 'diversity-challenged campus.'

With all that Guest has accomplished so far in her short period at SSU, she still has found spare time and enjoys listening to music, writing poetry, and drawing. Guest is an incredibly unique spirit and is also a startlingly attractive young woman (sorry, she's unavailable, guys!). When asked what the one thing was that she would like to tell the campus she responded, "have an open mind". SSU is very lucky to have people like Guest as a part of its student body.

Student activities planned With greater goals in mind

"We love her!" exclaimed Jackson. "She's really starting to make changes here. She's not just sitting around waiting for things to happen."

Members of the NAACP and the Union of African-American Students (UAS) frequently meet with Dudley-Eshbach to offer practical suggestions for improving the diversity of SSU's student body. Jackson claims that many of his organization's activities are in keeping with SSU's overall goals of reaching out to minority students.

This past week, the group sponsored a skating party at a local roller rink, and has a bowling party scheduled for this Saturday. "I want to have more socials," Jackson said. "We should [work toward] getting people together to have a good time." The concern that SSU may not always provide adequate activities for minority students is being catered thanks to the planning of such events.

Racial minorities may feel more at ease knowing that they have a network of cultural and social support on campus.

"Personally, I think [the NAACP] is an excellent support system. It allows you to meet and hang out with people of your own race as well as people from other races. Members can explore more... [racial], social, and cultural groups than they could without the group," said freshman Crystal Jenkins.

Members note that white students as well as African-American students attend NAACP meetings and events.

Find out how you can be involved in the NAACP's cause. The national information hotline is 410-521-4939. Contact SSU's chapter at 410-548-5397 to learn about more events and how to become involved. The next meeting is this Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Caruthers Hall auditorium.

Bush's first bombing...

Late last week, President George W. Bush was enjoying his first excursion out of the country as president, albeit a business trip to meet his presidential counterpart in Mexico, Vicente Fox. The trip was quickly overshadowed by what was going on in the Middle East, however. Shortly after noon on Friday, the United States and Great Britain executed an air strike against five targets in Iraq. This was the first air strike carried out since then-president Clinton ordered four days of bombings early in his first term.

Pentagon officials said that the five sites targeted were a mix of communications and radar centers that were being used in an effort by Iraq to increase the accuracy of their anti-aircraft artillery. U.S. and British planes routinely patrol the "no fly zones" in the north and south of Saddam Hussein's nation, and have been offered increasing resistance by the Iraq military, which has begun to take aim at Allied patrols that fly through Iraqi airspace. Hussein originally agreed to the no fly zones, but has since ignored the legitimacy of that agreement, along with the terms of sanctions against the nation that sparked the Gulf War by invading neighboring Kuwait. Hussein banned U.N. inspectors from investigating sites where weapons are manufactured and stored in 1993, prompting Clinton to order the air strikes then.

The international community condemned the combined US and British air strike, claiming that Iraq's military actions did not warrant such decisive force. Russia, China, France, Turkey, and even Muslim leaders in Asia have been quick to criticize the U.S. Leaders from these nations have called the air strike "totally unacceptable" and the "worst kind of state terrorism." But these nations do not put their own troops on patrol over Iraqi skies everyday in an effort to conform to the agreement made by all sides after the Gulf War.

Iraq has erupted with rage after the bombings, and has since declared a jihad, or holy war, against the U.S.

Saddam Hussein has vowed vengeance for the attack, saying, "We shall fight them on ground, sky and sea, and their aggression will deepen their failure." It seems that since he does not have to put his life on the line, only the lives of his citizens whom he has killed ruthlessly in the past, Hussein can afford to be naïve enough to challenge the U.S. once again.

While the people of Iraq smart over the recent attack, Pentagon officials say that the operation was successful and thus have no plans for further bombings unless provoked. There is widespread support for the air strike in Congress among both Republicans and Democrats. While the bombings were provoked by anti-aircraft fire from the Iraqi army targeting U.S. and British planes, some officials have said that recently the Iraqi army has been undergoing a process by which they were linking the communication centers with underground fiber-optic cables. This linkage would make their targeting much more precise, thereby putting U.S. troops' lives in even more danger. If completed the linkage would have been very difficult to destroy.

Pentagon officials, as well as National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice, consistently stressed that the mission was routine. They claim that the recent attack was not a change of direction by the administration, but simply a strike that would have been ordered no matter who was in the White House. Many outsiders doubt that assertion, however, saying that Bush is probably eager to assert control over his father's nemesis Hussein. He proclaimed many times during his campaign that he was disappointed by the Clinton administration's failure in containing Hussein in the critical years after Operation Desert Storm. But officials within the Bush administration insist that the only reason the operation required presidential approval was due to the fact that strikes were conducted above the 33rd parallel, and above the southern no fly zone. An interesting aside, probably having little bearing on the decision, is that it was discovered early in Clinton's administration by the CIA that there was an assassination attempt by Iraqis on the elder Bush during his presidency.

While Pentagon officials assert that unless provoked they have no plans to attack again, officials in Iraq are sure to be weighing their options for retaliation. Tensions in the area were already high prior to the U.S. air strikes, but now with the Iraqis calling for a holy war against the U.S., angers are peaked and the world waits apprehensively for the next move.

Neylan SSU's top bird

SEAN IANUCCI
SPORTS WRITER

Lisa Neylan, of the SSU women's basketball team, has become synonymous with greatness over the last four years. On Saturday night, Neylan became the Sea Gull's all-time leading scorer, cementing her eminence for years to come.

Lisa Neylan is SSU's all time scorer

On a break away late in the second half, Neylan was wide open for the easy lay-in, pushing her career points to 1,504 as an exuberant fan base cheered in homage.

The breakaway basket was unusual considering that Neylan has scored the majority of her points down low, using a variety of moves and bruising plays to dominate her opponents.

Neylan, a 6-0 center from Trenton, NJ, scored 14 points in the game on Saturday against Goucher to surpass Dawn Webb's (1985-1989) 1,503 points.

"It's really exciting," Neylan said. "It's still hard to believe."

Neylan began playing basketball her freshman year at Steinert High School and hasn't looked back since. She had an immediate impact at Salisbury starting and has been a dominant force since her freshman season. Neylan's efforts have also been acknowledged outside of the Eastern Shore as she was named CAC player of the year in 2000.

She leads the Sea Gulls in scoring through 23 games this season, averaging 14.5 PPG. She has also led the team in scoring in 9 games this year.

Neylan has proved to be more than a scoring threat throughout her career. She leads the team with 182 rebounds this season, and last Wednesday became the third player in team history to record 1,000, pulling down 8 boards against Gallaudet. Her career total stood at 1,006 as of Friday.

The four-year starter has contributed to the team's finest season ever this year, 21-3 (14-1 CAC), helping the Gulls secure a top spot in the CAC tournament.

Neylan has had tremendous help from her teammates who complete a 2001 team of immense depth that is ranked 18th nationally. Senior guard/forward Elisabeth Barfuss is currently fifth on the all-time scoring list, and second this year in team scoring with 14.1 PPG. Amy Campion is number four, and two in assists and steals in the CAC. Campion and Jaime Kohlenstein are also averaging double figures in points per game.

Neylan said she owes much of her success to all of her teammates who have pushed her every day over the past four years.

"The games are always fun, but they are much more fun with no pressure," said Neylan. "I know that if I am not playing my best, we still have twelve other girls that will play hard and win."

Opponents have had little success shutting down Neylan throughout her career at Salisbury. Her perseverance, teamwork, and great play over the last four years have earned her a top spot on two of the team's most prestigious lists. While Lisa Neylan's career is coming to an end, her legacy is just beginning.

Mitchell, Roddy awarded years top swimmers in CAC

On Feb. 11 the Men's and Women's swim teams competed in the CAC championship in Fredericksburg, VA. The women were able to break a plateau that had hindered them for years, placing second over all-surpassing Catholic who finished third, while the men finished fifth.

The highlight of the meet came from senior Rebecca Mitchell and junior Brendan Roddy who were named Women's and Men's CAC Swimmers of the Year.

Mitchell, who broke two SSU records in her final meet, won the 200 and 500. She was also a member of the 200 medley teamed that also placed first.

"Rebecca had a great weekend," said SSU Head Coach Jill Stephenson. "She had never won an event before at the CAC Championships, then claimed three this weekend. Getting named as the swimmer of the year just capped the weekend for her."

Roddy firmly established himself as the top long distance swimmer in the conference and won the 500 freestyle along with the 1650 freestyle for the third straight year.

Senior Cineva Kline also won three meets being a member on the 200 medley and winning the 100 backstroke in a school record of 1:00.65 and the 200 backstroke.

Senior Alison Calcaterra respectively placed third and fourth in the 200 and 100 freestyle, and junior Julie Wood placed third and fourth in the 100 and 200 backstroke.

Though the men placed only in fifth, Stephenson believes that the team is making vast improvements to reach the upper tier in the CAC.

"Almost everybody swam their best times of the year. In several events, we just missed finishing in the scoring spots," Stephenson said.

Stephenson was also named CAC Women's Coach of the Year for the team's improvements over the past season.

The Baltimore Ravens won the Super Bowl...a month ago.

The overwhelming exuberance and the sigh of relief that has come from Baltimore can be understood. The team won the biggest spectacle in sports, despite the fact that the matchup was one of, if not the worst in championship history. Congratulations. Now let's move on.

Ever since that snowy day in '83 when Irse and his Mayflower trucks moved to Indianapolis, you felt wronged. The fact that the ongoing celebration is treated as though it was owed to you because you were cheated 17 years ago is wrong. If you are thinking that, remember—this team is not the Colts. This team is the Cleveland Browns.

This team was one that had sell-outs for years in possibly the worse stadium in sports history, a stadium that was nicknamed "The Mistake by the Lake." Fans sat in the end zone gnawing on bones and eating dog treats. By celebrating this way you are thumbing your nose at these fans.

Jumping on the bandwagon is also something that is recently has been found with this team. Up until a month before the end of the season, no one was boasting Ravens jerseys with any pride. It was not seen. The demand has risen so much in recent weeks that a shack of a store with limitless world championship merchandise has set up shop in the Salisbury Mall. Those tacky car flags placed on every automobile in sight display the fact that you have been a longtime Ravens fan going all the way back to December. How many of you out there were displaying the black and purple when the offense was 0 for October in the TD department?

They're saying but you have the best defense ever. Ha! The best defense ever in a division that has two XFL teams playing in it.

Oh, but Ray Lewis is the best defensive player in the NFL. Which is true, but how much of that is because opposing teams are afraid to lay a block on him in a chance of getting stabbed? You may laugh, but 90 percent of all sports is mental and going against a guy that was on trial for murder a year ago can have an affect on you.

So be gleeful that your team is the best, Baltimore, but remember Cleveland and know where you have been.

Basketball gets a win entering CAC

LENNY MIERZWA
SPORTS WRITER

On Saturday, the men's basketball team got strong help from the bench in order to help defeat the Gophers of Goucher College 74-69 in Capital Athletic Conference action.

The Gulls found themselves down early on senior night, as Goucher jumped out to a 12-3 lead with 15:39 left in the first half. SSU got back into the game after senior captain Josh Merkel hit a couple of three pointers to cut the Gophers margin to 16-11 with 11:10 remaining. After Goucher converted a pair of technical free throws, SSU began to cut back into the lead. On consecutive possessions the Gulls got a pair of free throws from forward Babatunde Bandele and guard Doug King to cut the Goucher lead to 18-15. Merkel added to the rally when he stole the ball from Wynder on the Gophers ensuing possession and passed to forward Jason Campion for the lay-in with 8:38 remaining in the half. Goucher then responded by hitting two quick baskets to extend the lead to 22-17 with less than seven minutes left in the half. The Gophers increased the lead to seven with 1:26 left when forward Paul Kwajafa grabbed the offensive rebound and scored on the put back. On the Gulls' next possession King hit a three from the top of the key to cut the lead to 37-32 with 57 seconds left in the half. After a defensive stop the Gulls got the ball back and King scored on a floater in the lane with just 9.3 seconds remaining. Goucher's Wynder added a pair of free throws before the half to give the Gophers the 39-34 halftime lead.

SSU came out in the second half and wasted no time cutting into the Gophers lead. With 18:32 left King scored on a lay-up off the inbounds play to cut the lead to 39-38 in favor of Goucher. After a Goucher free throw, King brought the ball up the court and took guard Byron Chandler off the dribble and pulled up for the short jumper to tie the game at 40-40. On the Gulls next possession King once again took advantage of Chandler as he drove right past him and scored the lay-up to give SSU their first lead of the game at 42-40. The lead remained two until the 14:07 mark when guard Greg Cooper hit a three from the wing off of the pass from King. After a defensive stop, King threw a bullet one-handed pass to Campion under the basket for the lay-in and the foul. Campion converted the free throw and the Gulls had a 50-42 lead with 13:33 left in the game. Goucher rallied back with 3:23 left in the game when forward Josh Stolz hit a pull up jumper in the lane to cut the Gulls lead to 64-61. After a couple of missed free throws by King, Merkel fouled the Gophers' Dwayne George. George hit both free throws and the Gulls' lead was cut to 64-63 with 2:36 remaining. On the Gulls' possession, guard Fred Biggs fouled King to put him on the line. However, King could not convert the free throws. Stolz responded for the Gophers by hitting the baseline jumper to give Goucher the lead with 1:37 left. Merkel responded for SSU by driving baseline and hitting the floater plus the foul. He hit the free throw and the Gulls took the 67-65 lead with 1:14 remaining. After a defensive stop by the Gulls, King drove to the basket and then passed to a wide-open Cooper. Cooper hit the baseline three to give the Gulls a 70-65 lead with 28 seconds left.

The shot by Cooper would turn out to be the game winner, as SSU would hold off Goucher by a final score of 74-69.

King was named the player of the game as he scored 28 points including 18 in the second half. Cooper gave the Gulls a lift off the bench as he hit 3 of 4 three pointers, which included the game winner. The game marked the end of the regular season for the Gulls who finished with a 15-9 overall record and a 9-5 conference record, which was good enough for a three seed in the CAC tournament. Goucher finished 4-10 in the CAC, which was good enough for the seventh seed and a first round game against St. Mary's. The Gulls will host a first round CAC tournament game tonight against Marymount.

Gulls grind Gophers On Tap.....

MIKE BECKMAN
SPORTS WRITER

The SSU's Women's basketball team concluded their regular season on Saturday night with a stomping of Goucher College 91-62. The Lady Gulls never gave the Gophers a chance in the game, jumping out to a huge early lead and never looking back. For the majority of the game SSU led by at least 20 or more

As the game progressed, everyone in attendance watched anxiously as Lisa Neylan, a four-year veteran and Senior co-captain of the team, broke the all-time scoring record, previously held by Dawn Webb.

After scoring 10 points in the first half, Neylan only needed four more points to break the record and about half-way through the second half she did just that. She now holds the record with a total of 1,504 points.

In addition to her 14 points, Neylan also added 8 rebounds and left the game to a standing ovation from the crowd as well as her team.

"Words can't describe this feeling, as a team we have accomplished so much. As a person I have accomplished so much," Neylan said. "I never thought I would do this. I am just proud of this team and I am proud of myself."

The two other seniors on the team are also starters, Michele Deschu and Elisabeth Barfuss, who added 19 points, eight rebounds and six assists. The Lady Gulls had five players in double figures led by Amy Campion with 20 points, followed by Barfuss, Neylan, Jaime Kohlenstein, who added 12 and six rebounds, and Robin Johnson, who came off of the bench to add 10 points.

Amy Campion was a force on the court Saturday night, not only with her points, but with seven rebounds and five assists. Along with the great offensive effort, the Lady Gulls also played terrific defense in forcing the Gophers to have 37 turnovers.

Before the game even started it seemed as though Goucher College didn't stand a chance. Jaime Kohlenstein gave a heartfelt tribute to the three seniors, and from that moment on, the players knew that this was their night.

The Sea Gulls tied a team record with their 21st win of the season to finish the regular season with a 21-3 mark and ending 13-1 in conference play, which is good enough for first place. Not only are they in first place in the CAC, but the team has also found themselves ranked 18th in the country.

With the number one ranking going into the Capital Athletic Conference tournament, the Gulls will play host to eighth-seeded Gallaudet, led by Touria Ouahid, tonight in the first round. The Gulls are 2-0 against Gallaudet this season. The Gulls have home court advantage throughout the CACs and should receive an invite to the NCAA even without an automatic bid given to the CAC tournament champion.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon ΣΑΕ

I was sitting around the other day and the phone rang and it was some guy named "Paddy." And he told me that he will be back in town on April 21, to once again throw the biggest party of the year. Come one, come all—even my english teacher Ms. Hall! If you have any questions, see an SAE. In other news, a happy birthday goes out to Pearsall. Anyone who wants a social—give Snow Hill a call. Finally, I heard Sisqo himself will be coming to club Olive to perform "The Thong Song" live. And the next time, there may be more money involved.

Alpha Sigma Tau ΑΣΤ

  - Other than that, you have the freedom to be creative!
  - The winning entry may be edited for production purposes
